Appointment With Death (BBC Audio Crime)

Synopsis

"You do see, don't you, that she's got to be killed? It's the only solution." Even when on holiday in Jerusalem—the so-called City of Peace—Hercule Poirot can't seem to escape the strains of death and murder. His first evening at the King Solomon Hotel finds the above phrase floating into his room from outside. What does it mean? Who is the speaker, and just how seriously should it be considered? While Poirot struggles to resist the lure of a fresh mystery, he cannot suppress the foreboding in his heart. Also in residence at the hotel are the Boyntons, a nervous American family held tightly in the grip of their matriarch. Then there is the young medic Sarah King, plus Dr. Theodore Gerard, an expert in the subject of schizophrenia. These and other guests are thrown together on an organized trip to the ancient city of Petra. Whilst love apparently blossoms for Miss King, death visits another member of the party. It is clearly murder, and there are a number of likely suspects. Only one man has the skill to distinguish between them: Hercule Poirot. Agatha Christie's exotic mystery is dramatized with a full cast including Jill Balcon and Miriam Karlin. 2 CDs. 1 hr 30 mins.

Customer Reviews

As an avid fan of Agatha Christie's mysteries, I am always delighted to read the ones that do not feature her famous sleuths. "Remembered Death" (originally published in Britain under the title "Sparkling Cyanide") is an intricately woven mystery that features two murders both made to look like suicides. And in a case where appearances are everything, the detectives and the reader will have a maddening time trying to uncover fact from fiction. Rosemary Barton was an extremely beautiful, wealthy woman. Married to the older George Barton, she was known to have love affairs, and after a terrible bout of the flu, it wasn't a surprise when she killed herself by drinking cyanide in her champagne at her birthday celebration. Everyone accepted that she killed herself, until her husband received letters stating the contrary. Now, a year later, everyone is forced to confront Rosemary's death a second time, no matter how much they want to put it behind them. Several people had motives for murdering her. Her younger sister, Iris Marle, inherited her fortune if her sister died childless. Her ex-lover, Stephen Farraday, needed her silence to save his political career and his marriage. Farraday's wife, Alexandra, was a coldly passionate woman devoted to her husband and his political prospects. Rosemary knew a secret about young Anthony Browne that he did not want to be made known. And George Barton's efficient secretary, Ruth Lessing, was in love with George and hated his dithering wife. With so many motives, it should be easy to find the murderer, but not until George Barton is killed in the same manner as his wife. The evidence points to none of the above, but it must be one of the five.
